PROHIBITION AND TEMPERANCE.

We are aware, of course, says the New York Tribune, that the title of this article is going to bring down upon us the wrath of our prohibition friends, who vociferously maintain in their omniscient way that prohibition is temperance, or the other way around—just as you please. But then they have been jumping on us for mildly intimating the other day that really, when you come down to it, prohibition doesn't always prohibit, so a little more criticism doesn't seem very much better.

With interest that Mr. William Anderson, the Anti-Saloon League leader in this state, answers our intimation that prohibition is not strictly enforced in Maine by declaring that once when he was in that state he saw little or no evidence of liquor selling. Naturally not; the "boot-leggers" of the Pine Tree state are no fools. They had Mr. Anderson's "number" the moment he entered the state, and we have no doubt that they carefully arranged conditions so that the most arid kind of aridity met him at every step of his progress.

Mr. Anderson also wants to know why we don't give the facts relative to prohibition in Kansas. Well, what are the facts? In a recent article Mr. White, of Emporia, declared that prohibition had made Kansas over into a sort of heaven on earth. It had done away with poverty, sickness, insanity and vice, and the people were living in idyllic and Edenic happiness.

Mr. White's thrilling word pictures impressed us, they always do, and we felt almost inclined to admit that prohibition had "won the count." But not so fast. What are those cold facts that stand in grim array? James E. House, the editor of a prohibition paper in Kansas, surely a competent witness in a matter of this kind, admits that there are, as the prohibitionists say, no insane persons in 85 of the 105 counties of the state. But that is because the insane of the state are kept in state hospitals. There are now 4,300 in these hospitals, and the number is increasing so fast that more hospitals will have to be built.

"There is," says Mr. House, "more drinking in Kansas now than ever before. In June last, 90,000 quarts of liquor were registered as imported into Topeka, or two quarts for every man, woman and child in the city." We don't, of course, vouch for the accuracy of these figures; but there they are, and they are entitled to at least as much respect as the rhetoric of the prohibitionists.

WHO IS WHO NOW

SWITZERLAND'S NEW PRESIDENT

Dr. Giuseppe Motta, who has been vice-president of the Swiss Confederation and head of the financial department, has been elected president, being the first Italian to head the little republic. He was born at Alrolo, in the canton of Ticino (the Italian-speaking canton of the republic) in the year 1871 and studied law at the universities of Fribourg, Munich and Heidelberg. In 1895 he started his practice as a lawyer in his native village and in the same year he was elected deputy of the state council.

In 1899 he became a representative of his canton in the national council. As chief of the Catholic-Conservative party of his canton he immediately began to play a prominent role in politics, and when, in December, 1911, after the death of one of the members of the federal council, he became a candidate for that office, he also received the undivided support of the radical party of the canton of Ticino. The young magistrate assumed from the beginning the responsible burden of the federal finances.

The office of president of the Swiss confederation provides by no means a lucrative income, compared with the high salaries government positions in this country. Up to two years ago the yearly income of the chief magistrate of the republic amounted to $3,000 only, and it was then raised to $4,000, which sum is now considered a very good salary. In this respect it must, however, be remembered that the president continues to live quietly and without any official pomp in his private residence. The high position he occupies as head of the Swiss confederation calls for no expensive social obligations. Democratic Switzerland is a staunch believer in simple and true democracy.

HUSSEIN, SULTAN OF EGYPT

The new sultan of Egypt, Prince Hussein Kamel, is a brother of the Khedive Tewfik and an uncle of the deposed Khedive Abbas II. He is a son of that magnificent Ismail, so beloved of the De Lesseps and the money brokers, who bankrupted his country to build the canal for the English to inherit, with the idea of making Cairo another Paris. He was a young man when his father was deposed and forced to leave the country. He went with him into exile and brought him back to Cairo for burial in 1895.

Like his father and his brother, Prince Hussein was educated in Paris, where he came under the fascinating sway of the Empress Eugenie. Ismail seated himself upon the khedivial throne by arranging the "accidental" death of the other heir, but Hussein has learned the more "civilized" method of intrigue. He is an accomplished Parisian gentleman, whose pronounced English sympathies can be tolerated as harmless, since the British have placed themselves in a position to make any French influence in Egypt innocuous. It can be taken for granted that he will be an obedient tool in the hands of the high commissioner for Egypt, Lieut. Col. Sir Arthur Henry McMahon, who goes to Egypt after having served as foreign secretary of India for three years.

Prince Hussein has undoubtedly been a faithful ally of the British secretary, Mr. Milne Cheetham, whom Lord Kitchener had to leave in charge at Cairo when Mr. Asquith unexpectedly besought him to become secretary of war.

ALL BULLETS MISS HIM

and for weeks he was following the German armies, astonishing the soldiers with his utter contempt of danger.

It has recently occurred that the count has ridden in the firing line of the infantry while making an attack. The men were advancing only by rushes and leaning low to the ground; but Haeseler would ride calmly forward with his attendant, the target of French rifles; and at times he was even fired upon by machine guns and cannon without being hit. In this way a superstitious tradition has found foothold among the soldiers as to the old marshal being supernaturally bulletproof.

YOUTHFUL ADMIRAL DEWEY

On the occasion of Admiral George Dewey's seventy-seventh birthday Secretary Daniels and all his aides and bureau and division chiefs called on the veteran sea-fighter to congratulate him, and Mr. Daniels remarked to him:

"I hope you feel as young as you look."

"I am young yet," responded Admiral Dewey, quickly. "I do not intend to be outdone by my friend and neighbor, ex-Senator Henry Gassaway Davis of West Virginia, who is ninety-two. Davis comes home from work at five o'clock in the afternoon and I ask him why he works so late. He explains that he had a great deal more to do, but he quit early to give the boys in the office a rest."

"Now and then I meet Davis and he says, 'Admiral, we must see more of each other as the days go on.' I say 'Yes,' and then Davis calls at nine o'clock in the evening, and when the servant tells him that I have retired for the night, he goes away swearing because I went to bed so early."

"But, Mr. Secretary, I get up every morning at five o'clock. I doubt if many of these gentlemen here can say as much. I am a hard worker, but I get plenty of sleep."

Secretary Daniels recalled the fact that Admiral Dewey was appointed a midshipman at Annapolis by Secretary Dobbin, a North Carolinian.

"Yes," answered Admiral Dewey, "and I am proud of it." I have been a Democrat ever since."
